

The ICJS Congregational Leaders Fellowship is a year-long program in which leaders of religious communities come together across traditions to combat religious bias and bigotry through promoting interreligious understanding, deepening relationships, and cultivating spaces of belonging.

Recognizing the important role religious leaders play both in their own communities and in the larger society, the ICJS Congregational Leaders Fellowship brings together three religious leaders (one official and two lay leaders) from each of 15 participating congregations. Each cohort draws a diverse mix of Muslim, Christian, and Jewish communities.

Through cultivation of relationships and collaboration on interreligious programs—as well as study, shared learning, and dialogue around what it means to belong and care for our neighbors—we build robust interreligious communities that interweave the civic, educational, and religious dimensions of our lives.

BENEFITS

- Build relationships between diverse religious communities
- Learn and dialogue around the three Abrahamic religions
- Gain skills in dismantling religious bigotry
- Attain grant support for interreligious projects
- Receive individual stipend

LEARN MORE / APPLY:

icjs.org/congregational-leaders/